Module 3: Expanding Presence with Bing Places

Overview: Google may dominate search, but Bing also has a local listing platform called Bing Places for Business. This module is a quick win – you'll learn how to set up a Bing Places listing, often by simply importing your Google Business Profile information. While Bing's market share is smaller (around 6-7% of searches), optimizing here can reach an audience your competitors might ignore. It's an easy extra step that can drive a bit more traffic and signals to your site. For a new agency, offering Bing optimization can also be a value-add for clients. Think of it as covering all bases for local search visibility.

Lessons:

1. Why Use Bing Places? – An explanation of Bing's role in local search. Bing is the default search engine on many devices (e.g., Microsoft products) and has a not-insignificant user base. There's less competition on Bing, so a well-optimized Bing Places profile can promote your business. Maximizing all search platforms is good practice – the effort is low compared to the potential gain of new customers.

2. Setting Up Bing Places – Step-by-step guidance to create or claim a Bing Places listing. If you already completed Google My Business, Bing lets you import those details directly, which simplifies the process. We log into the Bing Places portal, choose the import-from-GMB option (or manually enter business info if needed), and verify ownership (usually via PIN by mail or phone, similar to Google's process).

3. Syncing and Optimizing – After import, you should double-check that all info carried over correctly. Ensure the name, on Google in the future, you should update Bing Places too to keep them in sync. Consistency across search platforms reinforces your local SEO signals.

4. Leverage the Opportunity – A brief discussion on the competitive advantage: since many businesses skip Bing, your client can stand out on Bing local results. We share an example of how being thorough (by doing Bing Places) helped a business capture additional leads that competitors missed. It's about covering the smaller funnels of traffic that add up over time.

Implementation Steps:

- Login to Bing Places: Visit the Bing Places for Business site (`bingplaces.com`) and sign in with a Microsoft account (or create one for free). Click "Get Started" and look for the option to import your business from Google My Business. This lets Bing access the GMB listing you created in Module 2.
- Import or Enter Details: If importing, follow the prompts to connect to your Google account and select the correct business. Bing will pull in the details (this saves time and ensures consistency). If not importing, manually fill out the business information just as you did for Google – be exact and thorough.
- Verify the Listing: Submit the business for verification on Bing. They may offer phone verification or send a postcard PIN. Complete whichever method is required. Verification on Bing is crucial, just like on Google, to be considered a trustworthy listing.
- Review and Optimize: Once verified, review your Bing Places profile. Upload any additional photos that might make it more appealing, and double-check that the category and description make sense on Bing's platform. Make sure NAP info matches exactly with Google and your website. Consistency will strengthen your citation profile across the web.

like hours remain accurate. Keep the Bing listing updated if your business info changes (address, phone, etc.) so customers on any platform get correct information.

Milestone: By the end of Module 3, your business will also be listed on Bing's local search platform. This means additional potential customers can discover it through Bing or affiliated search partners. While Google remains the priority, you've now covered a secondary channel that gives your client a bit more reach. This completeness is part of offering professional, thorough SEO services.
